3. What is sold

A written survey of a single workflow, the one the director designates, followed by a sixty-minute readout.

The survey measures the distance between what the director states about the use of AI in that workflow and what the elements they provide make it possible to establish. Each finding carries its evidence status and its source; what cannot be established is named as such.

It is not an audit, not a certification, and not legal advice. No mark, no maturity level and no percentage is issued.

Scope, deliverables, prices and timelines are set out in the General Conditions of Sale.

4. General conditions of sale

The applicable conditions are published at </legal/terms> and may be consulted there at any time, in French and English.

The version that applies to an engagement is the one in force when the scope is confirmed in writing. Earlier versions are available on request at legal@sprinklingact.com.

5. Independence and conflicts of interest

Sprinkling Act carries out one activity and no other. It resells no tool, receives no commission from any vendor, and holds no referral agreement with a provider of AI solutions.

Fees do not depend on the content of a survey, nor on whether further work follows. One of the three possible outcomes of a Baseline is that no further work is warranted, and it is invoiced at the same price as the other two.

Where a survey covers an organisation with which a relationship exists that could affect the reading of the findings, that relationship is stated in the report itself, at the point where it bears.

The same undertaking applies to what is offered to us. Any incoming proposal — partnership, resale, referral, payment by a third party — is examined against these clauses. One that does not meet them is declined, whatever the amount.

6. Regulated activity

This activity is not subject to authorisation, to a professional order, or to a protected professional title. No professional body accredits it, and no result it produces is opposable to a third party as proof of compliance.

The methodology applied is published and time-stamped: SA-METH-2026.08. Each report names the version it was produced under.

7. Complaints and dispute resolution

Any complaint should be addressed to legal@sprinklingact.com within 14 days of delivery. We reply within 30 days.

If you are a consumer and no satisfactory resolution is reached, you may contact the Belgian Consumer Mediation Service:
